Pedro Appleton received an MArch from the Faculty of Architecture of the Technical University of Lisbon in 1993 and an MSc in Building Heritage and Conservation from the Portuguese Institute of Technology (IST) of the University of Lisbon.

He collaborated in various design offices before joining the practice. He has also worked in cinema production and amateur theatre, and in recent years has become increasingly involved in research and development on universal design and special needs' design. In this capacity, he has lectured and served on various bodies and juries as an expert for the Portuguese Association of Brain Palsy (APCL).

Within the partnership, he has focused on design sustainability and environmental design strategies, in addition to the design of aquariums, botanical gardens and nature-driven projects, realising, amongst others, the internationally acclaimed Mora River Aquarium.

As part of his interests, he has also worked and researched extensively on education facilities and on implementing pedagogical strategies through design.
