ANANTARA ALGARVE HOTEL
VILAMOURA, PORTUGAL
2009–2004

A classical golf resort hotel
within three signature courses

Located in the touristic heart of the Algarve, the Anantara Victoria is a golf-dedicated hotel facing the Victoria golf course (hence the name), and surrounded by two other courses. This quasi-symmetrical building is formed by a main central building and two bedroom wings which generate a west facing u-shape. The project comprises a total of 184 twin and 79 double guestrooms, in addition to 14 junior and 2 executive suites, plus a presidential suite with private rooftop pool and garden. Furthermore, it includes a large conference facility, with a capacity for 950 people, which was carefully laid out in order to preserve the undisturbed life of the hotel.

The arrival experience begins with the entry square. With its three independent drop-off entrances surrounded by a stone arcade, it separates the flow of guests coming as groups, or for conferences, into the lateral canopies, releasing the monumental porte-cochère for the individual visitors.

The impressive double height lobby offers direct views to the golf course. From there, guests can descend towards the exterior pools and bars, or go up to the fine-dining restaurant and the Spa.

Meticulously detailed in fine stonework, solid wood and handmade ceramics, the building echoes the spirit of prewar grand hotels, as it aspires to a contemporary rethinking of that classical splendour. The facade system is a stereotomic composition of massive yellow limestone blocks, white precast concrete lintels and brass-anodized aluminium frames. Also in precast concrete, and as part of the facade composition, the artist Pedro Calapez designed and moulded a series of decorative bas-reliefs.
